Test Correction Instructions

Earn back half of the points you missed on a milestone test · one correction per missed question

Purpose: Test corrections are an opportunity to learn from your mistakes, strengthen your understanding of the material, and improve your performance on future assessments.

For each question you answered incorrectly, complete the following steps:

Step 1: Rewrite the Question

- Rewrite the entire original question, including all answer choices (if multiple choice).

Step 2: Identify and Explain the Correct Answer

- Write down your original answer.
- Identify the correct answer.
- Explain why the correct answer is correct, using specific historical facts, evidence, or concepts from class.

Step 3: Reflect on Your Mistake

In complete sentences, explain:

- Why did you get the question wrong? Did you misunderstand the question, confuse historical information, overlook important details, or simply not know the material?
- What did you learn? Explain what you now understand that you did not understand before.

Important Reminders

- Complete all corrections in your own words.
- Explanations must be thoughtful and specific. Simply stating “I guessed” or “I didn’t know” is not sufficient.
- Your goal is to demonstrate that you now understand the material, not just that you know the correct answer.

Example Correction

Question: What was the primary purpose of the Proclamation of 1763?

My Original Answer: A. To increase colonial taxes

Correct Answer: B. To prevent colonial settlement west of the Appalachian Mountains

Why It Is Correct: Following the French and Indian War, Britain issued the Proclamation of 1763 to limit westward colonial expansion and reduce conflicts with Native American groups.

Why I Got It Wrong: I confused the Proclamation of 1763 with the taxes Britain imposed after the French and Indian War. I remembered that Britain was trying to control the colonies but did not understand the specific purpose of this policy.

What I Learned: I learned that Britain used different policies to manage its colonies after the French and Indian War. The Proclamation of 1763 was intended to limit westward settlement, while laws like the Stamp Act were designed to raise revenue.
