The Atlantic Charter

President Franklin D. Roosevelt & Prime Minister Winston Churchill · August 14, 1941

Source: The Atlantic Charter (1941). Public domain. Continuous passage.

> Months before the U.S. entered World War II, Roosevelt and Churchill set out shared war aims — self-determination, free trade, and a world free from fear and want — that shaped the postwar order and the United Nations.

Third, they respect the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and they wish to see sovereign rights and self government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them;

[. . .]

Sixth, after the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny, they hope to see established a peace which will afford to all nations the means of dwelling in safety within their own boundaries, and which will afford assurance that all the men in all lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear and want; Seventh, such a peace should enable all men to traverse the high seas and oceans without hindrance;