ERA 5 · EARLY REPUBLIC

EVERY CHOICE BECOMES A PRECEDENT

Governing Without a Map

Washington Sets the Precedents

I

The Cabinet

Created executive departments—State, Treasury, War—and a cabinet of advisors still used today.

II

Two Terms

Voluntarily stepped down after two terms, a precedent unbroken until 1940.

III

Neutrality

Kept the fragile new nation neutral in Europe's wars.

IV

Federal Force

Used the army to enforce federal law at home.

SECTION

Foreign Policy: Staying Neutral

Keeping Out of Europe's Wars

1793

Neutrality Proclamation

Washington declares the U.S. neutral in the Anglo-French war.

1794

Jay's Treaty

Eases tensions with Britain and avoids war—though unpopular.

1795

Pinckney's Treaty

Spain grants access to the Mississippi and New Orleans.

Revolution Divides America

- In 1793 revolutionary France went to war with Britain and Spain.
- The 1778 alliance still bound the U.S. to France—but another war would be ruinous.
- Washington issued the Neutrality Proclamation, keeping America out of the conflict.

Two Treaties, Two Neighbors

Jay's Treaty

1794 · with Great Britain

- Britain agreed to abandon its forts in the Northwest.
- Avoided war, but failed to stop the impressment of U.S. sailors.
- So unpopular that John Jay was burned in effigy.

Pinckney's Treaty

1795 · with Spain

- Opened the Mississippi River to American trade.
- Granted the vital 'right of deposit' at New Orleans.
- A popular diplomatic win, especially for western farmers.

SECTION

Securing the West

The Whiskey Rebellion, 1794

CAUSE

An Excise Tax

Hamilton's tax on whiskey angers cash-poor frontier farmers.

→

REACTION

Armed Revolt

Western Pennsylvania farmers refuse to pay and attack tax collectors.

→

RESPONSE

Federal Force

Washington personally leads ~13,000 militia into the field.

→

RESULT

Authority Proven

The revolt collapses—the new government CAN enforce its laws.

Federal Power Made Real

- Washington became the only sitting president to lead troops in the field.
- The show of strength stood in sharp contrast to the failures under the Articles of Confederation.
- It proved the federal government could enforce national law across the states.

Conflict on the Frontier

- U.S. expansion sparked war with Native nations in the Northwest Territory.
- Victory at Fallen Timbers led to the Treaty of Greenville (1795).
- Native nations ceded much of present-day Ohio, opening it to settlers.

SECTION

Hamilton's Financial Plan

Four Pillars of Hamilton's Plan

I

Assume State Debts

The federal government absorbs states' war debt to build national credit.

II

National Bank

A Bank of the United States to hold funds and issue currency.

III

Protective Tariff

Import taxes to shield young American industry.

IV

Excise Taxes

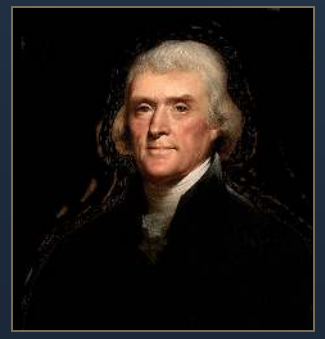

Internal taxes—like the whiskey tax—to raise revenue.

The Bank of the United States

- Hamilton argued a national bank was "necessary and proper."
- Jefferson called it unconstitutional—the Constitution never grants such a power.
- Washington sided with Hamilton; the Bank was chartered in 1791.

Strict vs. Loose Construction

Jefferson & Madison

Democratic-Republicans

- Read the Constitution strictly—only the powers it names.
- Feared a too-powerful central government.
- Envisioned an agrarian republic of independent farmers.

Alexander Hamilton

Federalists

- Read the Constitution loosely—implied powers are allowed.
- Wanted an energetic, strong national government.
- Envisioned a future of commerce, banking, and industry.

How a Financial Plan Split the Nation

- Urged Americans to avoid permanent foreign alliances.
- Cautioned against sectional divisions between North and South.

2. Hamilton's financial plan (debt assumption, a national bank, tariffs, and excise taxes) built national credit but ignited a fight over the meaning of the Constitution.

3. The strict vs. loose construction debate split the country into the first political parties —Federalists and Democratic-Republicans.
