Woodrow Wilson, address to a joint session of Congress (the "Fourteen Points"), January 8, 1918

What we demand in this war, therefore, is nothing peculiar to ourselves. It is that the world be made fit and safe to live in; and particularly that it be made safe for every peace-loving nation which, like our own, wishes to live its own life, determine its own institutions, be assured of justice and fair dealing by the other peoples of the world as against force and selfish aggression.

[. . .]

I. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

[. . .]

XIV. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small states alike.

DBQ Practice · Evidence Beyond the Documents

PROMPT

Evaluate the extent to which U.S. participation in World War I expanded the power of the federal government over American life from 1917 to 1920.

Your task: Identify ONE specific piece of historical evidence that is NOT in the document on this page but relates to the prompt. Write 2–3 sentences describing it and explaining how it supports your argument.

What earns the point: To earn the point, use at least one specific piece of evidence that is not found in the documents (for example, a law, agency, event, or person) and explain how it is relevant to an argument that answers the prompt. Naming it without explaining its relevance is not enough.

Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr., opinion for a unanimous Supreme Court in Schenck v. United States, March 3, 1919

We admit that, in many places and in ordinary times, the defendants, in saying all that was said in the circular, would have been within their constitutional rights. But the character of every act depends upon the circumstances in which it is done. The most stringent protection of free speech would not protect a man in falsely shouting fire in a theater and causing a panic.

[. . .]

The question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent. It is a question of proximity and degree. When a nation is at war, many things that might be said in time of peace are such a hindrance to its effort that their utterance will not be endured so long as men fight, and that no Court could regard them as protected by any constitutional right.
