The Gospel of Wealth

Andrew Carnegie · North American Review · June 1889 · excerpts

Source: Andrew Carnegie, 'Wealth,' North American Review 148 (June 1889), text via Wikisource. Public domain.

Steel magnate Andrew Carnegie was, by 1889, one of the richest men in the world. In this essay he argued that the rise of vast inequality was both inevitable and beneficial — but that the rich had a moral duty to administer their surplus wealth for the public good during their lifetime. He distinguished 'wise' philanthropy (libraries, universities, parks) from 'indiscriminate charity' (giving directly to the poor).

Connect: Gilded Age industrialists used the same 'natural laws' argument that antebellum slaveholders (Class 19) used to defend slavery as a 'positive good.' What's the pattern?

Key Passages

On inequality as 'natural'

> while the law may be sometimes hard for the individual, it is best for the race, because it insures the survival of the fittest in every department. We accept and welcome, therefore, as conditions to which we must accommodate ourselves, great inequality of environment, the concentration of business, industrial and commercial, in the hands of a few, and the law of competition between these, as being not only beneficial, but essential for the future progress of the race.

The duty of the rich

> This, then, is held to be the duty of the man of Wealth: First, to set an example of modest, unostentatious living, shunning display or extravagance; to provide moderately for the legitimate wants of those dependent upon him; and after doing so to consider all surplus revenues which come to him simply as trust funds, which he is called upon to administer … the man of wealth thus becoming the mere agent and trustee for his poorer brethren, bringing to their service his superior wisdom, experience, and ability to administer, doing for them better than they would or could do for themselves.

On indiscriminate charity

> It were better for mankind that the millions of the rich were thrown into the sea than so spent as to encourage the slothful, the drunken, the unworthy.

The famous verdict

> Of such as these the public verdict will then be: ''The man who dies thus rich dies disgraced."

HIPP Analysis

Model answers fill the first three rows. Use them to explain the author's Purpose in the last row.

HIPP Element	Your Analysis
Historical Situation What was happening when this was written?	The Gilded Age: industrialization, huge fortunes for men like Carnegie, rising inequality, labor unrest, and debates over Social Darwinism.
Intended Audience Who was the source written for?	Educated, wealthy readers of the North American Review, especially other millionaires.

HIPP Element	Your Analysis
Point of View Whose perspective? Whose is missing?	Andrew Carnegie, a self-made steel magnate and Scottish immigrant, who believed in Social Darwinism and his own success; workers' views are absent.
Purpose What did the author want to accomplish?

Analysis Prompts

1. SAQ — describe change over time: Describe ONE way Gilded Age wealth concentration differed from earlier American wealth distribution.
2. What does Carnegie consider ‘good’ giving vs. ‘bad’ giving? Whose perspective is missing?
3. How might a Populist farmer in 1889 have responded to this essay?